Summer 2002

.... Summer Amazon Angel Issue

● In this issue, we feature the best peacock bass fishing bargain in Brazil ... period. In fact, costing less per day than most guided trips right near your home, this may just be the best fishing value you'll find anywhere!

● Fishing Techniques - Once again, we offer specialized peacock bass fishing tips. This time we focus on the Woodchopper, the most thrilling top-water strike inducer ever to get wet. Learn the tactics to succeed on the fishing trip of a lifetime.

Well, I've been home since the end of March, when our Exotic fishing season came to a close. As soon as I got home, I began guiding shad charters here to help me come down to earth more easily from my great 2001/2002 season in South America. Some north-eastern trout kept me busy for awhile, then stripers to keep a line wet in late May. As our waters warmed, I started largemouth fishing and now, in late June, I'm starting to look the summer fishing doldrums in the eye. I hate to say it, but there's only one thought in my head right now. PEACOCK BASS! My season doesn't start for another 3 months but my mind is already returning to Brazil. I can't wait to get back to pursuing the world's greatest gamefish again PR

Fall '2002 Peacock Bass Yacht Trip The Most Trip for the Money....Anywhere!

Acute Angling's fall '2002 Yacht Expedition provides more of everything that every angler wants. Our tremendous mobility allows us to cover more water and reach more remote locations. Four distinct fisheries, over 350 miles of water offer more fishing opportunities than you can cover. And, the rich waters of the Rio Matupiri basin hold more fish than most other peacock bass regions.

More fishing is always good, but there's even more. The air-conditioned Amazon Angel provides more comfort than just about any other way of accessing the vast Amazon basin. Our superb cooks provide more great food than you can possibly eat. Our guides and yacht staff provide more superior service than a five star hotel. Want more?

There is no place more amazing in the entire world! The lowlands of the central Amazon basin hold the largest peacock bass in the world - and that's a great thing.... But there's lots more. This extraordinary, vast rainforest is also home to the world's greatest biodiversity. It's unique, pulsative ecology causes some of the weirdest seasonal changes anywhere. Water levels rise and fall up to 40 feet! Vast floodplain jungles border some of the only ancient forests still unexplored by Western man. Pink dolphins swim under your boat and steal your fish.

This is a land without roads. The rivers are the highways. Villages along the banks are home to native people living a simpler, more primitive lifestyle than you can imagine. Still want more?

Want to bring your wife, your dad, your son? This is the perfect trip. The comfortable yacht makes it a simple and pleasant matter to relax when they've had enough fishing. (I know, you never have enough, but to your constant amazement, others sometimes do). Your partner can read a book, bring a laptop, listen to music, take a snooze, all in air-conditioned comfort and absolute security. Or, I can take guests trekking, or birding or on a visit to a native village. Meanwhile you and your guide can forge ahead exploring some of the best peacock bass waters in the world. There's still more.

Our fall yacht trips are the lowest priced, top quality trips available anywhere! You get 6+ full days of guided world-class fishing, comfortable accommodations, delicious food, exemplary service and a tour of the greatest wilderness in the world—for $1950. And to ensure that you enjoy your trip, I'll be there, on-site, fishing with you, making certain that every aspect of our journey works as planned, and more. If you've been dreaming about fishing for the world's greatest gamefish but held off because you've worried that it's too dangerous, too uncomfortable or too expensive, you've just run out of excuses. Join us this fall!

The Amazon Angel Peacock Route

In 1540, Francisco de Orellana became the first European to begin exploring the Amazon. Almost 500 years later we begin our own Amazon journey, retracing a portion of Orellana's route. Once we leave the settled areas of Manaus and Borba we can quickly see that not a lot has changed in the Amazon's backcountry in nearly half a millennium. The biggest difference perhaps is in us. We're sitting in air-conditioned comfort, sipping a caipirinha (Brazil's national drink) in our yacht's lounge as it steams its way along the fantastic river systems of the Amazon.

The Amazon basin makes its own weather. The rainforest's strange cycle of flood and dry weather circulates counterclockwise throughout the Amazon. The optimal season for peacock bass fishing follows directly behind. As the floods begin to withdraw from the southern part of the basin in July and August, the Rio Madeira drainage becomes transformed into the hottest fishery in South America during the months of September and October. And that's exactly where we're headed.

We start our journey on the main bodies of the Amazon and the Madeira Rivers, the superhighways of the Amazon Basin. Here the waters are clouded with suspended particles washed out of the distant Andes Mountains. The rich sediment provides a fertile base for the region's flooded forests, the world's densest fish nursery. Pink "boto" dolphins can be seen cavorting in the coffee colored waters of these giant rivers, feeding on dense, silver schools of "piaba" (baitfish) or the always tasty piranha.

As we leave the main rivers for the network of smaller tributaries, we enter a different, more primitive, world.

Near the mouth of the Rio Preto, we can access the clear black waters of the Rio Autaz Mirrim. This river's complex network of channels, oxbows and lagoons holds very big peacock bass. When water levels are right, we'll probe this fishery for its lunkers and use the opportunity to fine-tune our gear and our fishing techniques for the giant fishery lying just beyond.

Next, we reach the wide Rio Preto, offering a varied range of fishable water. It's many points, islands and lagoons hold peacocks of all sizes, while its rocky outcroppings offer the fly-fisherman wonderful action just an easy cast away. Small "caboclo" villages (Portuguese speaking descendants of the region's original Indian tribes) overlook some of the river's strategic travel points. A northern tributary, the Tupana can also offer fine fishing.

At the mouth of the Matupiri, the Rio Preto widens into the strange, fish-laden Lago Tacuia. A vast 40 mile long flooded forest, Tacuia is a lake without real shorelines. It's convoluted flooded forest structure provides cover not only for peacock bass, but for a wide range of Amazonian aquatic species. "Tucuxi" and "boto" dolphins patrol its open waters, while the quiet flats hold manatee and the giant, prehistoric, air-breathing pirarucu (arapaima). Peacock bass of all sizes can be found in its shallow standing timber, along its deep points and in its serpentine feeder streams. Even when water levels elsewhere in the system are running high, this strange and mysterious place provides excellent access to great numbers of peacock bass.

The Rio Matupiri is our ultimate destination. Totally uninhabited, this gorgeous waterway offers anglers 100 miles of lagoon studded fishery. There's more structure and fish habitat here than you can cover in a lifetime. Closed to commercial fishing and the general public, the Amazon Angel has been given exclusive permission to fish this river's pristine waters by the caboclo village of Piranha, on the Rio Preto. Giant, open water lagoas, narrow, creek-like igarapes, small sloughs, oxbows and flooded igapos offer an amazing variety of fishable water off of the main river, while on the river, lagoon mouths, steep barrancas and plentiful standing timber provide even more fish-holding structure.

Winding from the west, a big, wide feeder stream, Igarape Acu meanders right through pristine rainforest. This waterway has yielded many big peacocks during very low water. At the southern end of the region of lagoons, the Matupiri narrows, becoming a riverbank fishery. Parana Coari, (a cut caused by seasonal flooding) provides a rare bit of fast water and defines a long structure-laden island.

New sights, new experiences and new fishing water to explore, greet the peacock bass angler every day in this amazing place. At any given time, there are areas with perfect water levels here. The Amazon Angel's great mobility, combined with the region's huge range of water types, allows us to probe this entire vast system, find the best conditions and concentrate our efforts where the fish are. Our anglers are assured of the greatest possible opportunity for success and fulfillment on their trip of a lifetime.

The '2002 Amazon Angel Trip Itineraries

The tragic events of September 11th, 2001 left airlines and schedules in complete disarray. After a half year of schedule changes and route cancellations, stable international flight schedules have finally emerged from the chaos. Aeropostal Airlines is now offering a daily flight from Miami to Manaus, Brazil via a one-hour stop in Caracas, Venezuela. Although arrival and departure times differ from past years, the daily flight gives us the flexibility to tailor our trips to follow suit. Each group below has a slightly different itinerary.

- Group 1 -

Wed, Sept. 25th - Depart Miami 5:40PM on Aeropostal flight VH503.
Thursday, Sept. 26th - Arrive in Manaus at 12:30 AM, clear customs and meet our agent who will transfer you to the Amazon Angel, waiting at the Tropical Hotel pier. Relax, unwind and get some rest in your cabin while the crew begins navigation to the fishery (25 hours).
Friday, Sept. 27th - The Amazon Angel arrives at the fishery before dawn. Begin your first full fishing day.
Saturday through Wednesday - Five more full fishing days
Wednesday Evening - The Amazon Angel heads to Borba.
Thursday, October 3rd. - Transfer to Borba airport for charter flight to Manaus. Arrive at Manaus domestic airport by noon then transfer to the Tropical Hotel. Relax and enjoy the great facilities or take off on an afternoon's sightseeing adventure. Overnight at the Tropical.
Friday, October 4th - Early morning transfer to the International airport to board Aeropostal flight # VH 903 at 7:30 AM. Arrive in Miami at 3:40 PM.

Peacock Bass Fishing Tactics & Techniques

How to Succeed with the Big-Game Woodchopper

The big, Luhr-Jensen woodchopper and its variants are, without a doubt, the classic peacock bass surface lures. Since the early days of peacock fishing in the Amazon, the incredible, explosive strikes triggered by this oversized, over-noisy beast of a plug has made it the angler's favorite.

Although just dragging this noisy lure (and its variations) through the water is often enough to aggravate peacocks into attacking, several techniques can make it even more productive. This article will cover some of the basics.

Casting it - The first challenge is simply getting this big, heavy thing out there. If you're a baitcaster aficionado, the job is relatively simple. Use a medium-heavy or heavy (preferred) rod. Make sure you have a fast retrieve reel (6:1 or better). Set up your reel's counterbalances for the lure's weight and train your thumb to avoid backlashes. Then just tie it directly onto the line and let the lure's weight do its stuff. Baitcasting gear will let you place your lure simply and effectively with no additional rigging.

If you're throwing a spinning rod, however, a little bit of pre-rigging will help make a greater percentage of your casts effective. The heavy weight of these baits causes the line to accelerate rapidly off the face of a spinning reel. A little bit of tumble or a headwind can cause the lure to snag the line in flight, negating your cast. This can be minimized, if not totally avoided, by the following steps.

First, use a lure with the weight bias to the rear, to help prevent tumble. One of the woodchopper variations, the Amazon Ripper is built this way right out of the box. Some guides and caster can equal or outperform the efficacy of a baitcaster for this application.

Moving it - The woodchopper is most effective when moved in short, rooster-tailing jerks. The key to this retrieve is to develop a rhythmic motion. (Figure 2). Length can vary from short snaps to yard-long rips and speed can vary from slow to fast depending on conditions, but the sound and movement should remain consistent within each retrieve.

In order to maintain a good rhythm, to keep your line tight and to stay in position to set the hook in a striking fish, it's important to always keep your rod in front of you. (Figure 3). Begin your rip with the rod pointing directly at the lure (Pos. 1). Using your forearm and snapping your wrist, load the rod and rip the lure (Pos. 2), stopping the rod within 90 degrees of its starting point (the blue arc). Quickly crank up the slack.

Never let your rod get behind you (as in the red position) and never let your line get slack. It will take you out of a good hooksetting position and will disrupt your ability to maintain a consistent fish attracting rhythm.

Locating it - Peacocks make lightning fast attack decisions. Three strategies for placing your bait effectively and moving it through high percentage locations will help to maximize the number of strike decisions you trigger and optimize the efficacy of every cast. First, cast at structure; the closer you land to standing timber, pockets between logs and shoreline points, the more likely you are to land on a laid-up peacock's head and instigate an instantaneous strike. Secondly, move your lure along structure; Casting so that your plug can either cross or parallel lay-down logs, points, shallow saddles, anglers prefer to reverse the components of the standard woodchopper, thus maintaining a three treble hook array. Secondly, use a stiff leader to help keep distance between the flying lure and the loops of line. A sixty pound test wire leader (cut off the swivel to minimize nose weight) works fine. (See Figure 1). Finally, practice casting using a slinging motion to help keep the line behind the lure. Using these techniques, a skillful spin-drop-offs or timber lines can increase your opportunity to get the attention of a cruising peacock and trigger a pursuit. Finally, take advantage of opportunities; Cast directly at surface disturbances, scattering baitfish and, of course, feeding peacocks. Use a combination of these techniques whenever possible and help yourself catch more fish with every cast.

Setting the Hook - Sometimes peacocks may strike a little behind a bait. When they miss, try not to react prematurely. Keep moving the bait forward and look for a second strike. Often, a slight speed-up may help to trigger a more direct attack. Sometimes a peacock will strike two, three or even more times. Don't panic and don't pull the bait away. When the fish takes your lure, wait until you feel the fish's weight and then strike solidly. This is not always a simple matter with peacocks. Their bony mouth makes it imperative to strike hard and sometimes repeatedly. Sharp hooks always help.

Woodchopper Variants - There are several excellent variations on the original woodchopper theme. All are fine products and offer a variety of differing characteristics and specifications, making them each useful for specific situational purposes. The well-equipped angler should carry samples of each type in a variety of colors appropriate for the specific fishery and water type.

Acute Angling Client Services

Introducing Garry Reiss - Where Your Job Ends, His Begins!

So you finally did it. Somehow you found the time, you juggled your schedule, you convinced your spouse and made it a reality. You carefully chose the date, the fishery and the type of trip that suits your needs. Getting to this point has been hard work. After endless hours of reading, consulting and researching you finally made the phone call to our office. You've made your reservation for the trip you've been dreaming about...Peacock Bass fishing in the Amazon. Now the fruits of your labor lie ahead: a week of fishing in the pristine waters in one of Brazil's many fish-laden rivers.

Your job is basically done, but ours is just beginning. After an angler has confirmed his booking, our staff goes to work arranging all of the components that will make your journey to the Amazon as smooth and enjoyable as possible. It begins with the reservation package that is assembled for each angler, specific to his chosen fishing destination. Each traveler receives a Pre-trip Questionnaire to fill out and return to our offices. This document helps us prepare for your trip and enables our staff in Brazil to make you as comfortable as possible. The questionnaire gives us basic information about each customer, as well as feedback on preferences regarding travel, visa and passport needs. We'll be able to determine what extra steps may be needed to assure that your trip meets your expectations.

Also included in the reservation package are a number of assorted information documents that help the angler prepare for his trip. The pre-trip information package, and pre-trip checklist contain valuable information to help you prepare. Many topics are covered, and most common questions are answered within the text. Thoroughly reading this information will assure that you have the right gear for your trip, and will give you background as to what to expect when you reach your camp. We also include an optional trip insurance package, which enables travelers to purchase partial or complete travel insurance packages from a major carrier. In order to serve all of our client's needs and make their fishing trip as successful as possible we have included information and instructions for access to the Tackle-Box.net website, our specialized on-line fishing tackle shop. Here, you can purchase the tackle and lures geared specifically to the trip you've chosen. Simply use the Tackle Wizard to guide you through the choices and prepare a package with all the items you need to maximize your fishing experience.

Our job is still not done. Approximately three months prior to your departure, you'll receive our Ticketing and Visa Package, containing key materials and important information relating to your travel. This package includes the documentation necessary, to secure your visa (and a passport, if needed) in a timely, economical and hassle free manner. Materials include a visa requirement sheet, visa application and instructions, as well as a consular letter, which must be submitted to obtain a visa. To make this process as easy and efficient as possible, we have partnered with Zierer Visa Service, a professional visa and document processing organization. They provide extremely quick turn around, flawless handling and they're sensitive to the needs of Acute Angling's clientele.

Also included is a domestic travel information form to be returned to Acute Angling so that we know where you are and when. In order to keep our fishing groups together and make the arrival to your destination simple and smooth, we book your international air flights from Miami to Brazil. As a further service to our clients, we offer you the option of booking your domestic flights, as well. This often allows for somewhat better prices and an easier transfer from domestic to international flights.

Our job still doesn't end here. We're always available to answer your questions, make suggestions or help you iron out problems that may arise prior to your trip. We continue to serve you as hosts and guides during your trip, right up until the time you board your flight to return home with stories of an experience you will never forget. Happy fishing.
